Vice President-who spoke in defense of Breckinridge and Lane. It is the highest compliment to Mr. Brown o say that he more than realized the expecations of his friends. His speech was signalized by the clearest statement of facts the most rigid accuracy of logic, and was chaste, and ornate, and beautiful in language, while the earnest and impassioned namer of the orator treathed living power and grandeur into the whole.

In a graphic and truthful manner, but in w words, he sketched the history of the emocratic party in its contest with other official parties, its battles and its triumphs, rst with the old Federal party, then with the Whig party, and lastly with the Know-Nothing or American party, until its vic-torious flag seemed destined to float over the capitol of every State, and its principles o govern for all remaining time the policy if the nation. He then alluded to the Republican party of the North, its sectional organization and issues, and showed oanch This brought the speaker to the consider

ESS ASHBEL PARSONS WILLARD, WAS orn in the town of Vernon, Oneida county. New York, on the 31st of Ootober, 1820. The characteristics which distinguished him in manhood were early developed. A friend, from boyhood, furnished the Chicago Times, in October, 1856, with the following sketch of this remarkable man, which we reproduce as an illustration of his character, and a noble example of what talent and energy ombined can accomplish: "Governor Willard's father, whose beau I farm fronted on the high road, settled in Vernon while Oneida county still belonged to the "Far West." Uncducated, but a man of extraordinary mind, he first became the Democratic leader of his school district, then of the town, and soon of the entire county, of which he was elected Sheriff eight times in succession—and up to the time of his death, was an equal among equals with such men as Beardely, Foster, Bronson, Denio, and the rest of that galaxy of the men who have made Operida county f able men who have made Oncida county norable, and who cheerfully recognized e energy and abilities of the bluff and state of the stat pon the people, could make or mar their olitical fortunes in an hour. The writer of this briefsketch remembers ividly the first time he saw both father and son; the one a stout, brawny, lrank, deep-voiced, hearty-looking man of forty, talking olitics on the Court house steps; the other stender, fair-haired, large eyed, rosy-neeked bey of fourteen, sighting a theodote and correcting an error in the field notes of the Professor of Mathematics, who, with his class, was out practicing on the village green. Young Willard was at that time ttending the junior department of the 'ln-titute" at Whitesboro', but was already acknowledged as the best mathematician in he whole academy.

Already the boy foreshadowed the man.

And to his father's credit be it said, hat in no instance did he repress this man-iness in his son. At times he would enjoy a hearty laugh over it but in the laugh from eight years old, this noble boy had been paying his own way. The pet of the court, the bar, and the officers of the couny under his tather, he found a thousand ways of making himself useful, and at the ags of thirteen, had saved enough of be little earnings to set up a miniature livery stable on his own account. To be sure, his stock in trade was only one open buggy and
